

Ice fishing on Kanopolis Lake

Contributed by Greg Wood
Thursday, 28 January 2010
Last Updated Friday, 29 January 2010

Ah, winter!

Lovely weather for a little fishing, no?

Well, I've been fishing in the snow plenty of times, but never got around to ice fishing until a co-worker, Jason Probst, invited me along on a very cold excursion to Kanopolis Lake recently.

A good time was had by all, especially Jason's 12-year-old son. But it did get just a little cold out there on the ice all day. That makes hanging around watching your line all the harder, so I managed to wander off for a while and do a little exploring. With about a foot of ice on the lake wandering seemed pretty safe, even if there were some giant cracks here and there.

You can read more about our luckless, as it turned out, fishing trip here .

And below are some photos for all you vicarious ice fishers out there.

But I think I've finally had enough of this cold weather. See you in the spring!

{gallery}icefishing{/gallery}